Hitler Remains Silent

THERE apparently is nothing now to keep the Red army from cutting off the Germans in Odessa and the Crimes, which would wipe out the last German threat in the Black sea sector, eliminate the last chance of a strong stand behind the Bug river and virtually end the Russo-German war in the Ukraine. The capture of Kherson is acknowledged to be the key to those probable results. A German debacle as bad as Stalingrad is in the making.

There is no glory in Germany's retreat. The invaders are being scourged from a country in which they can claim no rights. They did not even pretend to go into Russia as liberators; they were conquerors, oppressors and looters. They are being touted as trespassers, entitled to no mercy. In whatever German sagas may come from World war II there will be no heroic passages on the Russian campaign. Even victory scarcely could have made Hitler's Insane adventure glorious, and defeat has made it a shameful. sordid, fearful thing. German soldiers found only defeat and misery in Russia. Leningiad is gone in the north, Odessa is tottering in the south, the scourge is in retreat, and Hiller remains slient. There is nothing left for Hitler to say.

Tactical Bombing

EXCEPT for German operations early in the war, the demolition bombing of Cassino which is reported to have leveled that key point of resistance in the Italian campaign is the only large-scale demonstration of tactical bombing in the modern era of air power.

The great raids on European targets from England have been classified as atrategic bombing-the systematic weakening of the enemy behind his lines. Tactical bombing, on the other hand, aims to destroy the enemy in his front lines. The Cassino raid has 'added importance for this reason.

Invasion of Europe from England will call for tactical bombing on a scale never approached before, with the objective of paralyzing resistance in whole areas for the landing of troops. While the potentialities of strategic bombing have been tested exhaustively, those of tectical bombing are relatively untried. It only can be imagined what may be the result when hundreds and thousands of bombers are used not to destroy factories far behind the lines, but are sent directly against the enemy to force him back on his own defences. The experiment at Cassino is no doubt being studied as carefully as any aerial operation yet tried by the Allies.

Backseat Rationing

OPA's announcement of a 33 per cent cut in gasoline rations in all states west of the Alleghenies, effective March 22, will produce a tremendous outburst of backseet rationing. Scarcely a motorist will be found who cannot point out to Administrator Bowles and his advisors where and how they have made a number of serious mistakes.

It is a safe bet, in fact, that so many mistakes and grievances will be enumerated that if Mr. Bowles and his advisors actually could hear them all they would have to throw up their hands in despair and call off gasoline rationing entirely. Anyone who has heard a sampling of the complaints of motorists about their lot hardly can help but be convinced that they should be given all the gasoline they wantimmediately.

But the fact remains that on March 22 holders of A cards will go on two gailons a week, complaints to the contrary notwithstanding. They will not go far, but they will manage somehow and some of them even may grant off the record that OPA and petroleum administration for war, which keeps track of the gasoline supply, may be motivated, by something more serious than a desire to keep them from enjoying the use of their automobiles.

Manpower Allocation

EACH new move in the manpower chess game between military and civilian services makes it a little plainer why there is keen official interest in a national service, act, It would establish centralized control over allocation of all manpower for the duration of

At least in theory, the centralized control would resolve the present dilemma of sustaining necessary levels of industrial and agricultural production while giving the military services the manpower they demand. It would be, in effect, a transfer of the present practice of allocating materials to the problem of allocating workers. Since the proposed national service act also would establish federal authormy over women, it would use them also as part of the available labor supply.

The fact is, however, that there is no reason to believe at present that a national service law can be enacted; there are too many arguments against it, too many misgivings about its probable operation and too many honest doubts of its actual necessity. The government is not going to have access to what seems to be in theory a master solution. It must approach the problem through the existing means of the secetive service act, the authority of the war manpower commission and the already establighed practices of a free labor market.

News Behind the News

Nazi Bomb Raids on London Believed Feeble and on Hit-and-Miss Basis.

By PAUL MALLON

W Germans have been able to hit some military objectives, but set together enough bombing their main objective plainly was planes to stage a new campaign against London.

The number of planes at their bases back in from the French coast indicates they may be able to send over 50 to 100 planes three or four nights a week.

That is all there seems to be behind their heavy-scale (150 to 200 homber) attack on the British capital early this week. Our best check lends confidence to the conviction they cannot sustain ever such a moderate scale offensive as that one, and have no facilities to expand their newly opened air Stories have been circulated that the bombings of London have been more severe than officially reported. There may be some truth in this general suspicion since it is not considered good military (ustom to divulge bombing damage. But the more significant truths of the situation are simply these:

Started & Weeks Ato

About six weeks ago the Germans renewed small scale night air attacks using about 59 planes one or two nights a week (one week five attacks). They hit some south England cities but concentrated mainly upon London.

Their raids necessarily were pot-shot and hit-and-run bombing on large area targets. No accurate attack on a war industry center

Daily Bible Thought

We should join the angels' song of infinite harmony and which God wants to prevall on earth; "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased."

WASHINGTON, March 17—The has been made. They may have to offset psychologically the effect of British-American raids on Germany with some show of encouraging retailation.

If they could get the planes, they might make it hurt, because their bases are closer to their objectives than ours are, But great stores and replacements needed for susinined, sir campaigns and these the Germans obviously do not have. .

Sacrifice Planes

They got these few planes together apparently by sacriticing them from the Russian front, and saving from their dwindling production for some months past.

The most they can do, therefore, is to knock down some buildings, start fires and cause suffering and death to the British civilian populaton. They cannot impede concentrations for the second-front by precision raids, or bring decisive consequences of any military nature.

Incidentally our bombing ventures over Germany the past week significantly have encountered little or no German fighter plane opposition. Hitler's fighter force was weakened by the previous two weeks of battling.

Chinese Gsin

The Chinese have shown on the north Burma front what they can do if armed, trained and fed.

They routed the famed 18th Jap Division (famed as far as the Japa are concerned for having taken Singapore), killed 2,500 and dispersed into the jungle those who were able to run. In this, they beat all kinds of Jap fighting. frontal assaults, jungle-circling, tree-hanging and what not.

Their main objective was to destroy the Jap threat to the new road to China, from India, still nearing completion.

The Chinese used the American tanks and equipment well, fighting under a solitary American officer, Col. Rothwell H. Brown, son of the columnist, George Rothwell Brown. In charge of planning the operation was Gen. Stilwell, who somehow always seems able to produce strong, moving action.

Although the British have just about come out even in their South Burma campaign, this North Burma experience should impress Lord Mountbatten as to what may be possible in the Burma jungles.

there is a general ban on war It is natural among people known for scrappiness that there is dissent. In Dublin I was told that some though it might have better had the Germans tried to invade "for that would have solved a lot of problems in a country so sympathetic to the other democracies."

Thousands of Irishmen serve with the British armed forces and some of the R.A.F.'s finest are from Eire.

The home army, Britishequipped, is some 200,000 strong, according to best reports, but the Eire air force is negligible and the navy consists of about half a dozen torpedo boats. That, says one government official, is further reason why Ireland should not go to war voluntarily, for her "entry into the conflict would have no bearing upon the outcome of the war." And the Irish think that to show official favor toward the Allies would be a step toward war.

preached in Germany, Italy and Japan. The hope in this caste lies in war, not in peace. And its voice in government is more often for settlement of controversies by war than by the process of peace. Probably 80 per cent of the German and Japanese people are no more militaristic than any other. But by their very docility they are constantly overridden by the warrior groups. OUT of this we have two quite different problems in making spirit of nationalism and selfgov- peace. The one, the extirpation

> It is not to be expected that the victorious countries, having defeated aggressive militarism at infinite cost, are going to melt their swords and allow the enemy to return to the practices of the last hundred years. armament among the Allies. The first lesson that we may well draw is from the experience with Germany in 1919. By the Armistice and the Treaty of Versailles, their land arms and their navies were surrendered. The huge mistake was that this navies. It perpetuated the warrior caste and all its traditions. It afforded a skeleton army and navy of skilled men ready for continuity of the German Gen-eral Staff and all their military skill, brains, and ambitions. We must make a better job of it this

Bow Tie Men

To Hear the Sape. You'd Think W. Old Timers Got Our Notion from Vocalist Frank Sinatra.

By DAMON RUNYON

ALL of us old-time bow-tie fellews are pretty much irked these days because of mixits noticing our bows and remarking: "Oh, Snours, eh."

Their insinuation is that we are imitating

Frank Sinatra, the warbler, though most of us were wearing bow-ties before he was born and besides he cannot establish himself at a 100 per cent bow-tier until he relieves harnes of a suspicion that he goes in for made-up boxs. This is a bow that is tied by a calculating and expert hand and made permanent by sewing. It usually has a gadget which attacher it to the collar. You just pick up one of these bows and snap it in place without, the exercise of any of the care and artistry that goes with tying the bow yourself.

We veteran bow-tie men have nothing against the manufactured bow per se, and in fact there is much to be said for it from the standpoint of convenience, but the fact is there is something stereotyped about it, something gauche that harasses our artistic sensibilities. It is all right for gents who have to dress in a hurperhaps, yet the very essence of the true par is leisure and our association feels that a man in a hurry should use a four-in-hand and not something that destroys the illusion of elegance characteristic of us bow-tie boys. THE greatest bow-lie wearer of stage or street history was Lew Cody. He seldom were any other kind of tie when playing a rolealways made the bow-tie seem a very clary article. He generally, wore bows when in street apparel, too. Cody was a great guy as well as a good actor of the leading man type. He livedy high and had fun.

He was married to the wonderful comediana.

Mabel Normand, Her like is yet to be duplicated seeing "another Mabel Normand" in every beautiful girl with a streak of humor in her playing. She too has been dead for years.

Cody was terrific with the bow-tie that calls for a wing collar on a shirt with a colored snift bosom, a combination that used to typify the boulevardier, I suspect it originated with Barry Wall, "King of the Dudes." Only Cody matches him in setting off a bow-tie properly. In these days it was considered de rigeur for a guy to wear a bow-tie with a wing collar and a stiff bosomed shirt, though nowadays it is worn with soft collars.

I think this would have given Berry Wall severe case of indigestion if he could have conceived of a soft collar on any shirt except that of a fireman or laborer. He may have become hardened to the soft collar in his declining years in Paris, but in his heyday in New York he would have issued an edict of some kind against it.

BERRY WALL is a fellow who made his fortune early in life, promptly quit work and became the plate of fashion and the mould of form. He got heaved out of the Grand Central Hotel in Saratoga Springs for springing what he called a tuxedo in the dining room, naming it for Tuxedo Park where he got the inspiration for this garment that should cause grateful mankind committed to formal dinners to rear a monument to his memory.

I must not forget Adolphe Menjou as great bow-tie man of the Berry Wall school of thought, which is to say Adolphe would scarcely, be guilty of wearing the bow without the wing collar and the boiled bosom. He is a great one for observing the-little nicetics in these sartorial "situations," Michael Arlen, au-thor of "The Green Hat," who is now living in this country, is a good bow-tie man of the soft collar generation.

I suppose you are thinking this is a mod inconsequential discussion, but I ask you to remember that Frank Sinatra gets as much newspaper space as any man living nowadays, and the thing everybody associates him with is his bow-tie. Oh. yes, and his voice.

E Pluribus Unum

By Truman Twill We wish we could remember some sayings in-

Latin to start this column, because it has come to our attention that the nation is in the mist of American Latin week. We dailied with the thought of geiting out one of the various ponies which enable newspaper writers to seem smarter than they are and copying some Latin sayings, but readers might not have ponies, and it wouldn't be fair to them Thinking back over the nodding acquaintance with Latin which the public school system mast possible in our case, we haven't the slighter doubt Latin should be retained in the curriculum as long as gentle ladies can be found who are willing to teach it to the children of this country. Aside from whatever it does to help them understand the origin of the jargon they speak it is a study that has direct bearing on the conduct in later years. We are thinking particularly about the stimulation to their imagination. Specifically, we are thinking about the ability to ride a pony gracefully.

The trick is to hold a tight rein and be master of the situation at all times. As ever Latin student learns sooner or later, there is a lot more to Latin translation than reading from the pony. There is always the possibility you may have the wrong page. The skillful rider knows when to get oil and walk. He knows when to look up disarmings at the feacher as if to say, "See, I'm not even holding on." He senses just the right moment to pretend that he has been thrown off and is lying helpless on the ground, victim of his one gnorance. The good student-the one who really sex something out of Latin-realizes no one is quite good enough to get by on bluff alone. He under stands that to run a bluff one must have a certain familiarity.

certain familiarity with the patter. He must able to parse and decline and even to knock of an irregular verb now and then. These are lessons that teach him how to behave in later life, when he goes up against something stiffer than a Latin teacher's same ticism. Or to state the case bluntly, any student who can struggle through to a passing man in a language he never heard anyone special must develop his latent resources of ingenuity. If he also develops his latent resources of inite-ligence, so much the better. There always the a fact of them

The real beneficiaries are those who have out how to make the best of a bad situamentraining which is proving to be worth its we.sai in gold for millions of former students of Land now doing that very thing in the armed force in war production and all other walks of life.
If they never thought about it before, American Latin week in 1944 may remind them what owe to their brief but spirited encounter with Cicero, Vergil et al.

What Is Your Car Worth?

That depends on how much care it has had since it left the factory. Too many have neglected doing the things necessary to keep their cars in good condition. But it is not too late. The government says there will be NO NEW cars until the Japs are licked. Will your car do this? Yes, if you do not longer delay. Bring your car or truck to our garage, get a careful prepared estimate. We will check your car and advise you as to the cost of items that must be taken care of to protect your valuable investment. We buy and sell cars on a close margin. See us before you buy or sell.
